American Study of the Classics.

Latin and Greek are doled out American colleges in doses. Reading, is it is known to European universities American colleges in doses. Reading, as it is known to European universities—that is, sitting down to study an author, and to read all there is of him, is unheard of here. Horace and Homer are simply exercises accompanying Zumpt and Hadley. The teachers, though I suppose very good scholars, have as a rule no literary aptitude for any task higher than the exposition of the grammar. There are certainly successful teachers in other departments in this country. I may here say that It is my belief that New Yorkers have in a number of the departments of Columbia College better teaching than can be yound elsewhere in this country. Any man who has ever sat under the instruction of Professor Nairns, for instance, knows that there is such a tuing as good teaching, knows what can be accomplished by a teacher who is at once learned, able and enthusiastic. But I doubt if there is a teacher of the classics in an American college who has the enthusiastic attention of his students. mixed, 43%c. Oata: Anchogan, sic; september, 56c.

covered on an Unbrown Island.

The New Orreans Picayune says:
About a month ago a friend of Mrs.
Harmon Jones read in an English paper the account of some Braish wasself naving been driven out of her course in a storm-and sighted an unknown island. Much to the surprise of the crew, the infant turned out to be inhabited, and stall more astonishing, by men who spoke the English language. The rest of the story, as given by the paper referred to, is that the castaways told the ship's company that they ware the Florinda party was had satied from New Orleans in 189, bound for California; that they had been wrecked on the island and had dwelt there ever since, it being them dwelt there ever since, it being then more than twenty years that they have not seen a buman face or a sign of the world from which they were so uttenty world from which they were so utteny eliminated.

The paper gave the names of several all of wnom are known to have been of the Florinda's crew, and in many other ways, according to the version of Mrs. Jones' friend, the identity of the party was established as none but themselves could have established it. It was fars ther stated that the British vessel offered to take the men on board, but they declined, saying that they had been loss a quarter of a century; that they knew not in what situation they would find the families they had left, and that they preferred staying and ending their days there rather than venture back to suck a doubtful and uncertain luture.

there rather than venture back to such a doubtful and uncertain luture.

This paper was four months old when Mrs. Jones' friend saw it one month ago, and the eyents narrated were doscribed as having occurred four months previous to the issue of the paper. It is just nine months then since the island was discovered by the British vessel, and at that time all or nearly all of the Florinda's party appear to have been alive. It need not be said that this news has aroused the deepest interest. To the community at large it recalls the familiar occurrence of the Florinda's sating from New Orleans with its adventurous company. To the families of the lil-fated men it comes like a message from another world, and is as though it were an announcement of resurrection. Within the past few days the relatives have been living in a state of con-Within the past few days the relatives have been living in a state of constant excitement, and many of them especially the sons of Harmon Jones, John A. Sidney and Captain Kenmure, the skipper of Florinda, have devoted themselves to the task of following the clue given by the triend who saw the English paper. Extensive inquiries are now on foot and the British consul has kindly interested himself in the affair so far as to agree to forward to the war office, in London, a statement of the circumstances, so that the vessel which touched at the Cantaways' forms can be ascertained and the bearings of the inland taken from her log.
